O 1967.093.001 maker, Button	One button-making machine "Deflange Button Machine Co. No. 1920". Of heavy cast iron, the frame is 11" high, a narrow right triangle in I-beam form, the top solid and curved outward from the vertical side in two parallel forks with a horizontal hinge shaft at right angles. The base is only 7" long by 4" wide; and has 4 holes for bolting to a bench. On the hinge is attached a 14" handle which by means of a curved projection at the bottom inside bears down on a cylinder. This is held sliding in two sleeves protecting from the frame, and is vertical. It is 6" long by 1" diameter, and is held up by a heavy coil spring between the two sleeves at the bottom is attached a flat plate 3' in diameter. There are loose and separate 4 spring loaded anvils (2) of polished steel, in different sizes; each half a shaft that fits in a hole in the base under the centre of the above plate. There are 4 other pieces that are apparently designed to fit over the anvils, but have no way of attaching to the flat plate. These are in two parts, the other sleeve fits closely around the edge of the anvil of appropriate size, and the inner part can have its depth adjusted with a set screw. There are also 3 other sleeves that apparently fit over the above in someway; but the operation of the device is not clear without an instruction book. The leverage of the arm is considerable. There are several boxes of button blanks.			GVM
